

The Daily Courant.

Wednesday, March 17. 1708.

London, March 17.

Yesterday arriv'd from Holland, the Mail of Friday last.

From the Amsterdam Courant, dated March 28.

Madrid, March 8.

THE 6th a Convoy of Cloaths and Money for the Spanish Troops, was sent from hence under a Guard of 180 Dragoons, for Sarragossa. This Court is dissatisfy'd at the King of France's recalling the Duke of Berwick, who is extraordinarily belov'd by the Spanish Officers and Soldiers. 'Tis advis'd from Malaga, that several of the Enemy's Ships coming from Barcelona, put into the Bay of Gibraltar the 25th of February, and the next Day flood out of the Sreights. The Weather has been very Stormy throughout Spain several Days; and the Rains having made the Rivers overflow, have done great Damage to the City of Seville and other Places: This bad Weather will put back the opening the Campaign 3 Weeks at least.

Perpignan, March 9. The last Letters from Court tell us the Duke de Noailles will be here the beginning of next Month; in the mean time the Troops that are to compose his Army are drawn hither, and are computed at 12000 Foot and 3000 Horse, to which will be added 17 Companies of Miquelets who did great Service the last Campaign.

From the Amsterdam Courant, dated March 24.

Zurich, March 11. The French and the Inhabitants of the Roman Catholick Cantons, never boasted so much as now of the flourishing Condition of the King of France's Affairs, particularly with respect to the War in Spain and the Design against Scotland: And 'tis incredible in what a ranting Strain they talk of them.

From the Antwerp Courant, dated March 23.

Paris, March 19. A Courier from Dunkirk has brought Advice, that the Men of War of the Count de Forbin's Squadron put out of the Basin into the Road the 14th Instant; that the Troops were then order'd to be imbark'd, but that their Imbarcation was afterwards put off to the 16th, on which Day they were Shipp'd, and the rest of the Squadron put out into the Road, and lay there till the next Day, when the pretended Prince of Wales went aboard at 3 in the Afternoon, and the Fleet sail'd at 5; but after two Hours Sail, the Wind coming North, The Count de Forbin was forc'd to come back to an Anchor in Newport-Pits. He had seen no Enemy that Evening. The said Fleet consists of 13 Men of War, 12 Frigates, and a great number of Privateers, besides 30 Transports having on board Men, Arms, Provisions, and Ammunition; making together 65 Sail. This Morning we had Advice from Versailles, that the King had an Account by an Officer who came Post with great Expedition from Dunkirk, that Yesterday Morning our Fleet lay Wind-bound before Newport, and that the English Fleet consisting of 40 stout Ships were seen from Dunkirk, but could make but little Way because of the contrary Wind. This last News has made the Court very uneasy, and doubtful of the Success of the Count de Forbin's Expedition. Notwithstanding the Duke de Noailles took his Leave to Day of the King, in order to set out for Roussillon, 'tis reported, he is commanded to defer his Departure for some Days; because the Military Operations which he is to undertake, will be regulated according to the Success of the Dunkirk Fleet. The 17th the King began to review the Troops of his Household in the Park of Versailles. All the Officers of our Army in Flanders are order'd to set out for Lille or Mons by the 1st of April.

From the Amsterdam Courant, dated March 24.

Mons, March 18. To Day arriv'd an Express from Dunkirk, and reports, that he saw the pretended Prince of Wales go on board about 6 a Clock Yesterday in the Evening, and that all the Ships were soon Sail'd out of Sight. We are big with Hopes here of the Success of that Expedition.

Brussels March 21. To Day at Noon came Advice hither, that the Enemy's Fleet were under Sail from Newport-Pits at 2 a Clock Yesterday Morning; that Admiral Byng was hinder'd by contrary Wind from coming up with them, but that he is now in Chace of them, proposing to overtake them before they reach the Place they are bound to. Major General Cadogan is now at Ostend, to give Order for embarking several English Battalions. They write from Mons, that the Count of Tauskirchen, who had seen the pretended Prince of Wales imbark, and wish'd him a good Voyage on the Part of the Elector of Bavaria, return'd thither the 18th; and that the Count de Arco is speedily to go to Versailles, to assist at a Council of War.

From the Amsterdam Courant, dated March 22.

Amsterdam, March 21. Letters from Nantes of the 15th of this Month relate, that an Imbargo was laid there on all Shipping; and that the Pilots of some Ships which were in a Readyness to sail, were taken and carried ashore, that those Ships might not slip away.

Paris, March 19. ' After many Messages to and agen, at length came an Express at one a Clock this Morning, with an Account, that the Count de Forbin having receiv'd the King's last Orders, caus'd the rest of the Troops to embark; that the pretended Prince of Wales went on board less indispos'd than had been given out, and in short, that the 17th they put to Sea in the Dusk of the Evening, to conceal their Departure from the Enemy, the Gates of Dunkirk being shut and the Guard doubled that no Person might carry out Intelligence. The St. Germain's Queen, since she heard of the pretended Prince's sailing, is continually weeping and praying for Success to his Enterprize: the Court flatter themselves so much with the Expectation of it, that the most sanguine talk of nothing but the Consequences it must infallibly produce. But the more considerate are more modest, knowing that Forbin put to Sea with Repugnancy: He writ a long Letter to the King, touching the Enemy's Strength and his own; and beseeches his Majesty not to lay the Blame upon him, if the Success should not answer the Schemes and Expectations of the Court. He concludes, that he made no doubt of getting away without being attack'd, if the Wind should continue as fair for him as it was when he went aboard; but that if the Wind chang'd, he foresaw he should inevitably be forc'd to fight the Enemy. P. S. Another Courier is just arriv'd, with Advice that the Fleet has been oblig'd by contrary Wind to put into the Road before Newport. We are assur'd, that when our King took Leave of the Pretender at St. Germain's, the Stile he us'd to him was King of great Britain, and your Britannick Majesty. The Duke of Berwick is to command in Dauphine, and Medavi in Provence.

Hague, March 23. ' Yesterday at 4 in the Morning arriv'd here an Express from the Field-Marshal M. d'Auverquerque, with Advice, that on Tuesday the 20th Instant, at 2 in the Morning, the Enemy's Fleet sail'd out of Newport-Pits. to the Number of 8 or 9 Men of War and about 17 Frigates and Privateers: It was not perceiv'd that they had any Transports with them. They came out of Dunkirk the 17th, but were oblig'd by contrary Wind to come to an Anchor in the said Pitts. While they lay there, Major General Cadogan sent a Vessel from Ostend to give Admiral Bingham Notice of what they had done; the Admiral return'd him Answer, that he had been inform'd of it, and was under sail towards them: But the contrary Wind kept him back. We know not yet, whether he has had Intelligence of their Sailing this second time, and consequently cannot tell whether he has engag'd or is in Pursuit of them. Some Advices say the Count de Forbin was order'd by the French Court absolutely to put to Sea whatever should be the Consequence. Men of the best Experience and clearest Understanding in publick Affairs, are absolutely puzzled what Judgment to make here of the Intention and Design of the Enemy: Their unusual Openness in owning the Expedition to be against Scotland, and their Boldness in putting to Sea notwithstanding they knew the British Fleet was prepar'd to oppose them, give Ground to think, that if they do go to Scotland, either they have more than ordinary Assurances of being assisted by a powerful Party after their Landing, (though by whom we cannot imagine,) Or, that they are out of their Wits. It may be easily suppos'd we are under great Impatience to learn where they will make their Descent, and with what Success. The British Minister will forthwith imbarck some Regiments at Ostend, for England; which will be no weakning our Forces on this Side, because the Enemy have by their Imbarcation diminish'd the Number of their Troops. Tho' People in this Country generally appear to be in no Apprehension of the Success of the Enemy's Enterprize, they cannot help being under some Uneasiness about it: Yet it will not in the least make the States slacken their Diligence and Application, in the Prosecution of the War on the Continent. The Treaty for continuing the 8000 Prussians in Italy, is at length absolutely concluded: But is not sign'd yet, because of the Absence of the British Minister. The States of the Province of Utrecht, who had refus'd to consent to the Subsidies allow'd the King of Prussia for those Troops, have agreed to it: They have also agreed to the borrowing a Million and a half, to be laid out on the Fortifications of the Places of this Commonwealth: The other Provinces had already agreed to it, and only that of Utrecht made any Difficulty. By the last Express which the Count de Noyelles sent hither, he earnestly solicited to be recall'd from the Service in Catalonia; and the Council of State have granted his Request.

London, March 17,

Yesterday arriv'd an Express from Sir George Byng, dated on Saturday last, with an Account that that Morning he got Sight of the French Fleet in the Mouth of the Firth of Forth, and that as soon as they discover'd him they made off to Sea; that he stood after them, and being then about 3 Leagues from them hop'd to be able soon to give a good Account of them, at least to prevent their landing Men or Ammunition. They had sent a Frigate up towards Edenbourg, with a Flag out, to notify the Arrival of the pretended Prince of Wales, but had not land- ed any Forces.

Sir George Byng has with him 30 Men of War.
